SYNOPSIS

The book “Air into Water” deals with sex and sexual relations between gods/goddesses, nymphs, animals, heroes-heroines, and human beings. Through metered poems, the book "dissects" sexual relations between beings, always leaving a clue for readers to deduce who the poem is about. It is a brief volume that relies primarily on the redondilha maior (heptasyllable), which brings the work close to Brazilian cordel literature and aims to align with the most widely used contemporary written form: saying a great deal using the fewest characters possible.
