SYNOPSIS

"Boiuna" transports the reader to a Manaus ravaged by a devastating pandemic. Amid the chaos and uncertainty, the young physician Túlio Felipe Aguiar arrives in the city to join the frontlines against the disease. Invited by his friend Muiraquitã, an Indigenous doctor, Túlio faces a challenge that transcends science: unraveling the mysteries behind the illness afflicting the population. Guided by ancestral legends and the wisdom of the kumu Uipirangi, they embark on a quest for the legendary "pedra-una," the sole hope for a cure against the wrath of the Great Serpent, the Boiuna. A moving story about the bonds of friendship, the power of tradition, and the search for healing in times of crisis.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Martins Filho, a university professor and researcher, is passionate about popular cultures, with a special interest in the short story genre within Brazilian regionalist literature. His relationship with writing is divided between passion and duty, having published several academic articles in the fields of philosophy, religious studies, and music. In his spare time, he dedicates himself to literary writing, exploring both prose and poetry. "Boiuna" represents the culmination of years of research and a deep passion for the cultural richness of the Amazon.
