SYNOPSIS

A collection of short stories expressing the painful, alluring female psyche, woven by the author since her adolescence to lay bare the changes and constants of the self. The texts address love, violence, madness, and sanity beneath a dreamlike wall that invites readers to dive in. Like warm water in a volcanic rock tub, the stories mold themselves to the hearts and lived experiences of all readers.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Ana Luisa Ferraz de Moura (also known as Nalu) was born on March 6, 1996, in Goiânia. She learned to read at age 4 and to write at 5, and has never stopped. Passionate about Edgar Allan Poe, Haruki Murakami, Marjane Satrapi, and Shirley Jackson, she enjoys terrifying stories featuring open endings and stream of consciousness. She holds a degree in Literature and is a specialist in Realist Literature. She is currently a physician and on track to become a surgeon. She has a black dog named Andy and lives for literature, fashion, the arts, and the people who surround and move her. This is her first published book.
