SYNOPSIS

An elderly gentleman heading to the doctor for a routine check-up; a young mother frustrated by the life she never attained; a dreamy teenager convinced he will reach great heights; two adventurous, rowdy young brothers echoing through a small country town—ordinary stories of lives unique in their own way. In Through the Windowpane, each story is a window opening for the reader to contemplate everyday life and the stories pulsing just outside. Yet, as with every window, there are always two sides: the outside and the inside. In this inward turn, these narrated tales also reveal themselves as an opportunity for readers to peer into themselves. Through the Windowpane is an invitation to read stories that capture the peculiar within the ordinary, opening as a means of contemplation—both outward and inward.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Mayron Cordeiro was born in 1989 in Volta Redonda, in the interior of the state of Rio de Janeiro. Surrounded by a large, talkative family, he learned early on to sit and listen to the stories of his elders. Soon after, he discovered that those stories also unfolded across a myriad of books, and he has been pursuing them along the paths of pages ever since. A teacher of Portuguese language and literature for over a decade, married, a father, a lifelong student, and naturally curious, Mayron has gradually shared some of the stories born from this intersection of reality and fiction, which shape his own journey through life.
