SYNOPSIS

Upon returning to her childhood country home, Elara plunges into a territory where time seems suspended and memories manifest in subtle, sensory, and at times ghostly ways. Amid the solitude of the house, the symbolic presence of nature, and the recurring appearance of a snail, she revisits the scars of maternal abandonment, the grief over a friend, and the voids left by family silence. Every object, every sound, every shadow invites a deep listening to herself. With lyrical and atmospheric prose, Gabriela Queiroz constructs a narrative that intertwines body, memory, and landscape, offering a spiraling journey in which the past is not merely remembrance, but a living and transformative presence. A Ghost of Herself is a novel about invisible wounds, broken bonds, and the possibility of reuniting with what remains—and with who one is—after loss.
