SYNOPSIS

The work "Thread" presents a peculiar narrative guided by an unusual narrative voice that sets out to describe the intricate connections among human experiences, delving into the memories of the soul and the echoes of an ancestral past. The main plot interweaves the lives of several characters, such as the young Edith, confronted with the complexities of family relationships and social inequalities, and later follows the journeys of Nadir, Sandra, and Driele, each facing their own challenges, secrets, and the web of family ties that both unite them and confront them with the fundamental questions of existence. The narrative explores the depths of human feelings, emotional inheritances, and the way the past shapes the present, all presented in a non-linear structure that invites the reader to reflect on the nature of memory and consciousness.
