SYNOPSIS

The stories that comprise this work carry both the subtlety and the strength of Vanusa Carvalho, an author who sees herself in constant transformation and refuses to be intimidated by imposed boundaries. The author crafts varied settings and situations, drawing upon different points of view and creative approaches. Through short narratives, Vanusa demonstrates that it is possible to transcend one's own cocoons when one has good stories to tell. The characters in Flowers to Feed Butterflies inhabit a kind of kaleidoscopic mosaic, walking paths that range from magical realism—such as the gentle character who meets the greatest Brazilian writer of all time—to a story that leaps forward millennia to reveal a dystopian reality, alongside tales of inner reflection and redemption, never losing sight of romantic delicacy.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

She is a mother, wife, public servant, and teacher in the state public school system. She holds a degree in Literature and Linguistics and a postgraduate specialization in Brazilian Literature. She has contributed to several poetry and short story anthologies and is the self-published author of two novels. She is a member of the Casa do Poeta Brasileiro and an enthusiast of Brazilian literature and art. She considers herself a pupil of Machado de Assis, cries easily, and has three caramel mutt dogs.
