SYNOPSIS

A man is blindfolded and arrested, for no apparent reason, outside his home while taking out the trash, leaving behind a pregnant wife and a job in the government bureaucracy. In prison, he will be confronted with the hardships of confinement and a promise, made by fellow inmates, that prisoners like him never spend more than six months there. In possession of a single personal belonging—a pocket watch—he begins to keep tally of the time he has left, while coming to understand the rules of prison life and the violence inherent in the very idea of punishment.
