SYNOPSIS

"Not Every Light Is Morning" is a collection of short stories that explore the human condition in rural settings along the Brazil-Argentina border. Fishermen, smugglers, and farmers are among the characters who paint a melancholic portrait of figures trying to reconstruct their identities in the face of everyday tragedies and the indifference of others. Through introspective prose, the author addresses themes such as loneliness, unspoken grief, and social tensions. The constant presence of the Uruguay River acts as a symbolic link between life and death, past and present.
