SYNOPSIS

On her deathbed, trapped by the noises of her conscience, the hospital corridors, and the horns and engines of the avenues far below, Dona Val does not revisit her life in order. Her thoughts are a chaotic and moving river flowing through a childhood in the countryside, lost loves, and the struggle to raise her children and build her own home. At the center of this whirlwind is Jean, the son who stays by her side, while family secrets, regrets, and wounded pride echo in her mind. "No One Dies Before Their Time" is a fiction based on the memories of the author's mother—an intimate and raw journey that proves life, down to the final breath, is an impulse of stories.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Igor do Prado is a father, a paulistano, a journalist, a radio broadcaster, a suburbanite, and a writer. He dedicates his writing to memory, orality, and the tenderness that keeps him going. He is a critic of chronic life. He writes to hear what has gone unsaid. Devoted to a communion that offers him meaning: the spirits of literature, the madmen of cinema, the orixás of music. No One Dies Before Their Time is his debut novel.
