SYNOPSIS

The Mirror's Diagnosis traverses the various phases of womanhood, from birth to adulthood. Along the way, it investigates, through the lens of the poetic self, the multiple forms of gender-based violence that haunt women. Beyond the harmful consequences of patriarchy, the book illustrates the complicity shared between women, art, and nature, revealing to readers the feminine strength rooted in the capacity to rebuild oneself. In a similar vein, the poems capture some of the challenges faced by neurodivergent women: stereotyping, prejudice, loneliness, and the search for self-knowledge. At the same time, they powerfully convey a poignant and poetic ability to reinvent oneself.
