SYNOPSIS

"What will be left of me?" is the central question that guides the routine of a mother narrating, in this humorous account, an ordinary day of motherhood. Divided into three parts, the book unpacks unusual occurrences across a single day, from the forced waking up to nightfall, in a single, relentless breath. The narrative addresses the trials and joys of motherhood, describing each event with the aim of deromanticizing motherhood and bringing humor to this complicated and—though it may not seem so at first glance—fleeting stage. Facing traffic jams in the hallway, fending off villains, and dodging Lego pieces scattered across the living room floor, will this mother manage to make it to the end of the day in one piece (or at least to the kitchen)?

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Glaucia Ank is a marine biologist, but decided that life held more excitement in entrepreneurship and added a son to the equation to make the adventure complete. Living in Niterói – RJ, she is a mother, feminist, and thoroughly restless. She has planted trees, practiced science, crafted, made jam, and written poetry. She published the daily-life poetry collection Plano Sequência and four other handcrafted books produced independently, in which she ironically exposes her view of the outside world as well as her own life.
