SYNOPSIS

This fable tells the story of Uli, a young monkey who becomes the guardian of her heart-flower bud, previously kept by her parents—a bud that will bloom when she finds love. However, Zé Colher, her godfather, has an unexpected reaction upon seeing the small heart-flower bud in her room. After enduring a traumatic situation, how will Uli react? Where will she find help?

In this book, art and dialogue emerge as paths toward processing a violent event. It also offers support to children and families who have experienced abuse, ultimately helping to spark and facilitate conversations about the topic and the importance of speaking up.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Born in Campinas, SP, in 1990. Ever since childhood, she has loved drawing and storytelling. At university, she studied visual arts and conducted extensive research on picture books. Today, she is an illustrator and teaches art to children and adolescents, who are a constant source of inspiration for many of her drawings. Illustrating this story was her first collaboration with Keila.

Author

She has lived in Campinas, SP, since her birth in 1973. She worked as a speech-language pathologist and researcher for many years, during which she loved treating children who did not like to read and who almost always ended up falling in love with books and stories. In 2016, she began studying children's literature and fell in love with words and colors all over again. Today, she writes, illustrates, and even holds art exhibitions. This is her first book published by Mondru.
