SYNOPSIS

"sensibility heightened — / it is the poet / blossoming" — thus begins the process of searching for the lyrical self, at the expense of the materiality of the author abandoned to neglect in the concrete forest where he (sur)lives. Between the permanence of the moon's phases and tearing oneself into poetry, sadness keeps him company, and haikus — the world's smallest poems — record the experience of searching for VERVE, the living matter of life. Perhaps the minuteness of the form was the elementary engine for expressing colossal feelings, among them loneliness and saudade, which, hooked by inventive images, find poetic resonances in nature.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

jurandir junior is a writer by condition and a psychoanalyst by choice. For years, he has woven writing into his life through poems, short stories, chronicles, and other texts. He grew up in Goiânia-GO, a city of antinomic pairs. VERVE is his first offspring.
